

News Application Demo

localhost:3000/#/sports

localhost:3000/article?id=politics/live/2020/apr/06/uk-coronavirus-live-boris-johnson-spends-night-in-hospital

Enter keyword ...

HomeWorldPoliticsBusinessTech

Saving UK coronavirus live: Boris Johnson spends night in hospital

UK coronavirus live: Boris Johnson spends night in hospital

2020-04-06

Bookmark

Type here to search

12:20 AM
4/6/2020

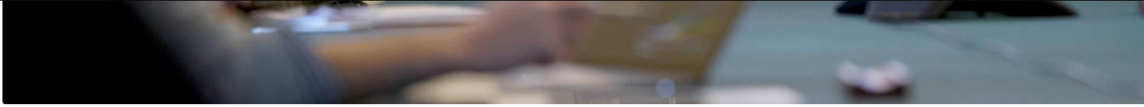

localhost:3000/#/sports

localhost:3000/article?id=politics/live/2020/apr/06/uk-coronavirus-live-boris-johnson-spends-night-in-hospital

Type here to search

12:21 AM
4/6/2020

Jenrick also played down speculation that the government planned to close parks or ban outside exercise, but he urged the public to stick to the existing physical distancing rules. He said he "disappointed" that some parks have been so busy that councils have been forced to close them. He said: There's a moral obligation on us not just to protect ourselves, but to protect society. That was part of the message that the Queen delivered very well last night. No council wants to close parks and open spaces. That really is an absolute last resort. We want people to be able to go out and have exercise, but that has to be done responsibly in accordance with the guidelines which is to go out alone with your household for a walk or run to get your daily fresh air and exercise, it is not to congregate with other people to have a barbecue or a picnic, and to put people's lives in danger by breaching the social distancing rules. Asked if the government was considering following France in making the public fill out forms before they could leave their homes, Jenrick said: We do

Comments (0)

best

Leave a comment

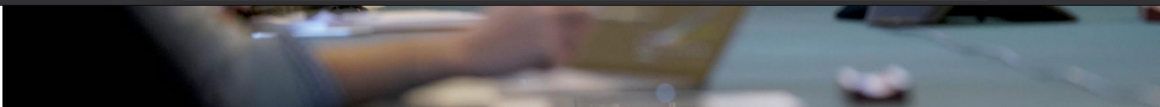

Sign In

Please sign in to create comments.

CommentBox

localhost:3000/#/sports

localhost:3000/article?id=politics/live/2020/apr/06/uk-coronavirus-live-boris-johnson-spends-night-in-hospital

Jenrick also played down speculation that the government planned to close parks or ban outside exercise, but he urged the public to stick to the existing physical distancing rules. He said he "disappointed" that some parks have been so busy that councils have been forced to close them. He said: There's a moral obligation on us not just to protect ourselves, but to protect society. That was part of the message that the Queen delivered very well last night. No council wants to close parks and open spaces. That really is an absolute last resort. We want people to be able to go out and have exercise, but that has to be done responsibly in accordance with the guidelines which is to go out alone with your household for a walk or run to get your daily fresh air and exercise, it is not to congregate with other people to have a barbecue or a picnic, and to put people's lives in danger by breaching the social distancing rules. Asked if the government was considering following France in making the public fill out forms before they could leave their homes, Jenrick said: We don't have any plans today to take those sorts of steps, but neither do we rule them out completely. What we want to see is the measures that have been implemented adhered to. For us all to take up our moral obligation to protect ourselves and others, and to play our part in an important national effort.

Jenrick also played down speculation that the government planned to close parks or ban outside exercise, but he urged the public to stick to the existing physical distancing rules. He said he "disappointed" that some parks have been so busy that councils have been forced to close them. He said: There's a moral obligation on us not just to protect ourselves, but to protect society. That was part of the message that the Queen delivered very well last night. No council wants to close parks and open spaces. That really is an absolute last resort. We want people to be able to go out and have exercise, but that has to be done responsibly in accordance with the guidelines which is to go out alone with your household for a walk or run to get your daily fresh air and exercise, it is not to congregate with other people to have a barbecue or a picnic, and to put people's lives in danger by breaching the social distancing rules. Asked if the government was considering following France in making the public fill out forms before they could leave their homes, Jenrick said: We don't have any plans today to take those sorts of steps, but neither do we rule them out completely. What we want to see is the measures that have been implemented adhered to. For us all to take up our moral obligation to protect ourselves and others, and to play our part in an important national effort.

Comments (0)

best

Type here to search

12:21 AM 4/6/2020

localhost:3000/

localhost:3000

Enter keyword ...

Home World Politics Business Technology Sports

NY Times Guardian

Stock markets gain amid hopes Covid-19 lockdowns are slowing disease – business live

British construction contracted sharply in March, according to the purchasing managers index (PMI) compiled by IHS Markit. The reading fell from 46 last in February to only 39.3 in March - far below the 50 mark that indicates an expansion. It was the steepest rate of decline since April 2009, the height of the financial crisis. Employment dropped at the fastest pace since September 2010, and co...

2020-04-06

BUSINESS

Car plant shutdowns may cost auto industry more than $100bn

The continued closure of car plants across Europe and North America will cost the auto industry more than $100bn (£82bn) in lost revenues if the shutdown lasts until the end of April. All major European carmakers have suspended production because of disruption caused by the spread of the coronavirus and if this continues as expected until the end of April, this will account for $66bn (£54bn) i...

2020-04-06

BUSINESS

Boris Johnson can run country from hospital bed, says UK minister

A senior minister has insisted Boris Johnson is fit enough to lead the country from his hospital bed after he was admitted with

Type here to search

1:38 AM 4/6/2020

localhost:3000/

localhost:3000

Enter keyword ... Home World Politics Business Technology Sports

NY Times Guardian

 Ignoring Expert Opinion, Trump Again Promotes Use of Hydroxychloroquine
The president's advocacy of the anti-malarial drug has created tensions in his administration, and fears among doctors that it could unnecessarily expose patients to risks.
2020-04-05 US

 Coronavirus Live Updates: Trump's Advisors Spar Over Untested Drug
For the second straight day, the president pushed the use of hydroxychloroquine, which has not been proven effective in treating the coronavirus. Prime Minister Boris Johnson of Britain has been hospitalized for testing.
2020-04-06 WORLD

 Stock Markets in Asia Show Cautious Gains: Live Updates
Live updates on stock market and business news during the coronavirus outbreak.

Type here to search

1:38 AM 4/6/2020

localhost:3000/

localhost:3000

novartis Home World Politics Business Technology Sports

NY Times Guardian

novartis
novartis
novartis pharmaceuticals
novartis stock
novartis patient assistance
novartis ag
novartis cosentyx

 UK house sales will collapse in 2020 as market goes into deep freeze, says study
House sales in the UK will collapse this year as the coronavirus pandemic puts the property market into deep freeze. But prices will fall by only 3% and will rebound next year, according to global consultancy Knight Frank. In the first reassessment of the property market by one of the major forecasters, Knight Frank said the number of house sales in the UK would plummet from 1,175,000 last y...
2020-04-06 BUSINESS

 A return to suburban grounds would offer a chance to reawaken the AFL's soul | Adam Collins
"The whole of consumerism is based on us wanting the next thing rather than the present thing we already have," Matt Haig laments in the book, Notes on a Nervous Planet. "This is an almost perfect recipe for unhappiness. We aren't encouraged to live in the present, we're trained to live somewhere else – the future." This immediately made me think of footy. I've been doing that a bit late. ...
2020-04-06 SPORTS

 Coronavirus lockdown to hit low-paid, young and women hardest, warns IFS
The low-paid, young people and women are likely to be the hardest hit by the coronavirus shutdown of businesses including

Type here to search

12:22 AM 4/6/2020

Results

Results

NHS to trial twice-yearly injection alterna...<

2020-01-13 SOCIETY

Dismay at lottery for $2.1m drug to treat...<

2019-12-20 BUSINESS

Drug firm Novartis fears no-deal Brexit c...<

2019-01-25 BUSINESS

Top Employers UK and Ireland 2020<

2020-02-19 CAREERS

'The job is not done': the fight to combat...<

Drugs by drone and mother mentors: ho...<

The $2m drug reveals medical research a...<

Lack of antibiotics in low income countri...<

localhost:3000/

localhost:3000/article?id=society/2020/jan/13/nhs-to-trial-incisiran-twice-yearly-injection-alternative-to-statins

The NHS is to launch a mass trial of an as-yet unapproved twice-yearly cholesterol-lowering injection, which it hopes will save lives and cut medical bills for thousands of people who do not take statins. About 40,000 people with high “bad” or low-density lipoprotein cholesterol will be invited to join the trial of inclisiran by NHS England via their GPs. The NHS has struck a novel deal with drugmaker Novartis, which will provide the injections free in exchange for the results of the five-year trial, which will be run by the NHS staff. The trial will get the drug to many of those at risk of heart attacks and strokes before it is licensed and has gone through the cost-effectiveness assessment of the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (Nice), which is expected in 2021. At that point, a price will have to be negotiated with the company. Smaller trials have shown the injectable drug to be very effective in lowering cholesterol. Statins, which perform the same job in a different way, are also very effective, but many people fail to take them on a daily basis – whether

Comments (1)

best

S

Leave a comment

Post Comment

Posting as Saurabh Vajramatti · log out

S

Novartis

- Saurabh Vajramatti · 1s · 0 · reply

Type here to search

1:16 AM

4/6/2020